Subject: Algae limits

There is no question that the State should set limits on algae in water.

Given the crisis levels of algae bloom proliferation that the state has been experiencing, and the evidence of toxic effects these blooms cause humans and wildlife, it is clearly in the publics' best interest that limits be established.

Healthy water is critical to Florida's well-being and economy. It is imperative that ALL steps be taken to address the acute water crisis we are experiencing - including setting limits. The recommendations of the blue green algae task force should be implemented.
