Subject: Toxic Algae Petition for Stricter Standards

To whom it may concern:

It's disheartening that no state in the U.S. has set limits on toxic algae. In 2016, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency recommended draft limits for two types on cyanotoxins, including those found in Florida. In 2019, the agency finalized less restrictive limits. I would like to join the Center and other groups to petition Florida to adopt the stricter draft standards. We can't afford to have the toxins cause liver disease and neurological disorders in other people and to have the toxins kill and sicken other dogs. Please adopt the stricter standards in our state of Florida to protect residents and tourists alike. Sfterall, the water is why many of us choose to vacation and/or live here.

Sincerely,
Jacqueline Johnson
